damaged, but that the accident was not serious and no one was injured.

The crew of the Clyne Rock, which reached Dover, reported the collision happened while the vessels were crearing each other, the Clyne Rock bound west and the George Washington east. They claim the accident was due to family maneuvering on the part of the Auerican steamship, asserting that the liner's position was so altered that the Clyne Rock was struck on the port bow.

The impression that air transport is enormously expensive was declared fallacious by Archibale Black, aeronautical engineer of Garden City, who was in charge of the design of the experimental airplane in which the first Liberty motor was installed and was the designer of the first all American fighting plane, the L-W-F Model G.

"Were it possible to load an airship fully on each trip of an air service between New York and Chicago the operating cost would be $48.75 to $52 a passenger." Mr. Black said. "This compares with the railroad rate of $51.50, including fare, excess fare and Pullman Allowing for the trip to and from the fields as well as an intermediate step

"The only reason we cannot passengers at such rates to-day is that it costs too much to get the business."
